Multiverse Reality & Science of Consciousness

Mastery of Awareness for Spiritual Awakening & Healing

NATURE OF REALITY

Quantum mechanics indicates that the aspect of reality beyond our perception differs significantly from the portion we are able to observe. This disparity is so profound that we have yet to grasp fully how to articulate quantum reality. No direct comparison appears to exist between quantum reality and the reality perceived through our senses.

To explain this conundrum, let us consider an analogy used by Anthony Peake in one of his interviews. Imagine the electromagnetic spectrum, ranging from gamma rays to radio waves, as the length of the Mississippi River—2,360 miles starting in a tiny lake in Minnesota, winding through nine states, and pouring into the Gulf of Mexico. If we ask how much of this 2,360 miles (representing the electromagnetic spectrum) a human being perceives with the five senses, the answer is astonishing: just an inch and a half, located about eight miles south of Hannibal, Missouri, the birthplace of Mark Twain.

The rest can only be acknowledged and measured with our technology. This raises the question: what may exist as part of "reality" that our present level of technology cannot perceive?

The Observer Effect

The observer effect in quantum physics states that the act of observing a quantum object changes it. For example, in the double-slit experiment, interference can only occur when no one is watching. Once an observer watches the particles passing through the openings, the picture changes. If a particle is observed going through one opening, it's clear it didn't go through another, forcing electrons to behave like particles and not like waves.

The observer effect is well known in fields other than physics, such as sociology, psychology, linguistics, and computer science. However, none of these fields have experienced the same level of publicity and controversy as physics.

THE ASSEMBLAGE POINT

The 114 Chakras are not just the junction points but the divine hidden dimensions of higher consciousness. Body and mind are just the manifestation of those energy centers.”

— Amit Ray, The Science of 114 Chakras in Human Body

There exists an area of the Auric field, a chakra, which is predominantly active and which reflects our own filtered point of view. This individual perception of our experiences is called the Assemblage Point (AP). Carlos Castaneda, in his writings about the teachings of Don Juan Mateus – a Yaquis shaman from Sonora, Mexico, describes it as an entry point or a connective physical point in the auric field called the Assemblage Point. It is sometimes also called Acquisition Point or Access Point.

This vortex of energy has nothing to do with the conventional term Assemblage that is used in Psychology, and which refers to the toroidal heart energy associated with the emotional dysfunction held in that center. Instead Castaneda's Assemblage Point is directly related to the dominant Chakra from which reality is primarily perceived.

The Assemblage Point is described as an energetic structure in the shape of a torus, whose exact location differs for every individual. The AP resides outside the physical body and is usually less than an arm's length away positioned around the upper half of the body.

Function Of The Assemblage Point

This energetic structure is a filter of new information based on culture, language, age, gender; as well as adopted beliefs, truths, and principles shaped by the experiences of life as well as the ancestral inheritance and the soul's experiences.

“Everything you think and everything you feel depends on the position of the Assembly Point – Don Juan.”

When the Assemblage Point moves to a different

The Assemblage Point is located in the field above the Heart chakra. Once located gently move it to another chakra to perceive that level of consciousness.

location, it updates the filters and allows a shaman to then perceive or assemble extra sensory data forming a new and extended reality.

A precise sensation is experienced in the Auric field when new information enters individual perception. This may feel like a slight burst or click, like popping a small balloon or ringing a bell. With it comes the notion of: “this is correct”, or “No, I don't believe that.” The Assemblage Point acts as the first responder to new concepts and ideas. As these get updated, the AP also adjusts to another location.

Perspectives Of Reality

The location of the Assemblage Point in the Auric field denotes an individual's mental strength and perceptual preference. This is the result of both genetic inheritance, past life experience, and the soul's journey through various dimensions and densities.

When the Assemblage Point is found beyond the shoulder width on the right (yang) side of the body, perception is filtered first from the left logical side of the brain to make its way through the current of manifestation and other chakras. The attention is on details, and it engages a strong analytical mind that

Channeling Is Attuning To

Channeling can be compared to how broadcasts are shared through radio waves or more precisely electromagnetic waves. Regardless of whether anyone is actively tuning into the frequency of a specific channel or broadcast from radio, TV or internet, the emission waves continuously propagate through the Field (space, environment and atmosphere).

The listener always has the option to choose which channel to tune into. That choice does not negate the existence of other channels, even though they remain hidden from his awareness.

Similarly, when connecting with a Spirit Guide or directly to Source (God, Divine Matrix, One Mind), there are potentially countless levels or channels for a person to tune in.

The ability to tune in to a broadcast is limited by the receiving device. An old fashion radio cannot get broadcasts from a computer, which can receive radio, TV and internet broadcasts.

The range of perception or the ability to pick-up a broadcast is defined by the channeler – the receiving device.

There must be a similar resonance, and a common attraction and purpose, to allow the channeler and the channel to be one.

"In some instances, when the old-fashioned radio is left on at the perfect frequency and the most appropriate broadcast comes on, that could revolutionize the life of our listener and channel, then that message is perceived and processed. However, if that channel is busy focusing on other things, then the opportunity for growth is temporarily lost. This means that channelers must be vigilant with their awareness and may consider using high-frequency practices of mindfulness to remain connected to a broadcast regardless of distractions.

The quality of a broadcast depends on the device and the emission's source.

And yet, at other times, our listener appears to be busy with life and out of nowhere an apparent circumstantial opportunity brings to him the perfect broadcast. Here is a moment of inspiration, creativity, or intuition created by Divine Providence, which was nevertheless set by an intention to receive or a deep longing combined with awareness to acknowledge the epiphany.

Unfortunately for some burgeoning channelers emitting dubious intent that uniquely benefits the self, and despite efforts and frustration, the radio broadcast is hacked by a low-level entity who pretends to be helpful. Often, the health of the channeler begins to suffer. See 'Symptoms of Spirit Attachments' on pages 20-21.

In other words, dedicating time to develop extra-sensory perception with various practices is essential, yet we must include practices to raise our overall vibration. This enables us to live with one foot anchored in the everyday life world of ordinary reality, as well as have the other foot firmly planted in the non-ordinary world that still surrounds us at all times."

Hence, if one desires to connect to a high frequency source of broadcast they must elevate their consciousness to attune to it.
